CONCEPT NOTE

‘Human rights’ in practice have been defined to include all aspects of dignified human existence which make every human being an equal member of the human family, and as some rightly point out that the essence of human rights is nothing but Human dignity itself. It is well worth observing that human rights are not the gift or bounty of any political sovereign through legislation or any edict, but are rights inherent in human existence, and therefore in their protection, a conscious citizenry must always be on the guard. The COVID-19 pandemic has thrown up serious challenges to the Human Rights across the world in general, and our nation in particular. There have been numerous reports from different regions about the tragic plight of workers and migrants, the cold treatments to patients by Health personnel’s and police and other security forces excessive use, and at times lethal, force to make people abide by lockdowns and curfews, and such violations have often been committed against people belonging to the poorest and most vulnerable segments of our heterogeneous population. It is in this context that this Webinar will highlight the current challenges to Human Rights from the perspective of two academic scholars representing the socio-political and legalistic dimensions of Human Rights. It is expected that this wide understanding of the various aspect and appreciation of the range of issues of human dignity, will define a true scope of human rights in our contemporary society.
